Located on USC historic “Fraternity and Sorority Row”, 920 28th Street is in the center of student life and conveniently close to campus; residents can walk or bike to campus with ease. All the dining, shopping and social opportunities of the new USC Village are less than a block away.

The stately colonnaded façade of the building opens on to a large common room where a large, wall-mounted flat-screen and a fireplaces are surrounded by couch and chair seating. A second large room provides dining tables and more seating, while a third is a separate, quieter study room. In front of the building has a distinct cardinal and gold basketball court, a built-in barbeque and an outdoor seating area.

The building offers a variety of very affordable room types, including singles, doubles and a triple room. Most have in-room sinks. All include an in-wall air-conditioning unit and a microfridge. Some of the residential rooms can be found in two halls on the first floor while most are located on the building’s second story. Large community bathrooms with multiple sinks, commodes and showers, are located on each floor.

Residents’ dining needs are met by the required Apartment partial meal plan, which can be used at a variety of USC Hospitality locations on campus and in the USC Village. Students living here can also use the large common kitchen on the first floor to prepare their own meals.

Like all university housing, 920 28th Street offers important amenities like wireless Internet connections and cable TV connections in each room, offering HD and premium stations, and a laundry facility. Maintenance and other services will be coordinated from the Customer Service Center on nearby Portland Street.

Limited parking is available behind the building; permits are required and are sold by USC Transportation Services.
